

WHAT'S THE PROBLEM THEN?

The water-fall was nice.

The muddy waters of the Dandera River jumped from the edge of the mountain, and were miraculously transformed into curtains of ethereal lacework as they fell. Like the dress of a dancing bride they sparkled and swirled, and rainbows of light shone through them as if from an embroidery of precious seed pearls. Still falling, the columns of white spray twisted and changed into ephemeral shapes, until they struck the lower ledges of glistening black rock and exploded outwards into fresh clouds of white that at last covered the dark depths of the abyss with an opalescent veil.
